A Change In Intelligence

To the Editor:

The continual bungling of our CIA in regards to the Hungarian uprising, the Suez crisis, Gaia, Congo, the communization of Cuba, and recently the leftist current in the Dominican Republic, is cause to question its intelligence capacity not only in a military sense but in a purely psychological sense as well.

During World War II, the FBI had sole responsibility for the civilian intelligence operation in the Western Hemisphere and had the friendly co-operation of our Latin American neighbors. The FBI had excellent success.

In view of the unquestionable bungling of the CIA I am proposing that Washington reactivate the war time Special Intelligence Service of the FBI.
